

Vaccination: A Challenging Perspective

The first issue to consider relative to vaccination is our innate immune system, which was designed to live in this world amidst bacteria and viruses. If this were not the case then none of us would have survived the centuries prior to the advent of vaccines and antibiotics. The single most valuable contribution to public health has not been medicinal but rather the flush toilet and other improvements in sanitation. The ability to have good nutrition and clean food and water are fundamentals for disease resistance.

The basic premise is that we were made miraculously disease resistant and able to self-regulate, self-heal and adapt very well to our environment. We don't need help, we simply need no interference. If we are prone to or falling prey to repeated illness then there is something interfering with our innate capacities. This is commonly nervous system disturbance due to spinal misalignments from birth trauma or early childhood falls, etc. We are not drug deficient.

The germ theory proposes that we are basically the incompetent, hapless victims of a hostile microbial world that periodically gangs up and attacks us while we are doing right and minding our own business. Louis Pasteur, the father of the germ theory, renounced his allegiance to this dogma before he died, declaring instead that it's not the microbes but the internal environment of the individual that is the determining factor.

Germs, viruses, bacteria, etc. must have a vulnerable host (the weakened body) to succeed in causing illness. Therefore, if a child (and later an adult) has their health bank account continually filled through positive health nurturing investments (such as breast feeding, sleep/rest, freedom from the weakening influence and immune system assault of drugs, regular spinal adjustments, good nutrition, and a sanitary and loving environment, etc.), then that child should naturally develop into a strong and vital individual.

This strong, vital individual should then be naturally exposed and allowed to develop colds and flues to chickenpox and other common illnesses of childhood to fully develop a healthy immune system capable of providing lifelong service. Developing healthy immune function through exposure to antigenic (viral and bacterial) challenges is like developing muscle strength through the regular stress of lifting weights. Avoiding these challenges leaves an individual in a weakened state potentially more prone to problems like cancer late in life.

We start with a God-given self-regulating and self-healing system that has no interference from spinal subluxations (misalignments with nervous system interference), etc. that is well nourished, and lives in a generally sanitary environment. Then the public health system comes along and says that all children must receive approximately 35 doses of 11 different vaccines prior to kindergarten as of the continually increasing last count.

The burden of responsibility for both guaranteed safety and efficacy should fall upon those recommending or more accurately mandating the injection of these foreign substances directly into the veins of our children. There is no research that proves that vaccines are safe or effective. The vaccines contain either live or killed virus but have also been known to contain pieces of DNA from other organisms. Additionally, they contain significant amounts of mercury, formaldehyde, antifreeze, and aluminum, used as preservatives and as adjuvant chemicals used to drive the antigenic reaction. These toxic ingredients have clearly proven not to be safe and do not belong in the human blood stream.

If vaccines were known to be safe then the federal government would not have indemnified the drug companies that manufacture them. You cannot sue a drug company if your child becomes autistic, diabetic, learning disabled and brain damaged or is killed by the vaccine. If you can absolutely prove, against a powerful army of government attorneys, that it was the vaccine that harmed or killed your child, then you can maximally receive $250,000. This is the value of your child's life. Few have been able to accomplish this.

In addition to the aforementioned illnesses, it is known or suspected that cancers, multiple neurological diseases and autoimmune conditions are also resulting from this vaccine onslaught.

Vaccines are purported to only produce humoral and not cell-mediated immunity. This makes it incomplete and not true immunity. This incomplete immune status is what often requires booster shots later in life. It is also a major factor in producing the potential for chronic degenerative illness later even if the child appears to survive the post-vaccination period unscathed. There are innumerable books and other resources available for further understanding. I have many books and articles in my office lending library. You can check out the National Vaccine Information Center at www.909shot.com.

There is a growing body of research, much in other countries and some within our own that is casting credible suspicion on vaccines as the cause for the tremendous increase of childhood illness over the last few decades. Why have vaccine manufacturers demanded from the American government that they be free from being sued for vaccine damage, if they were safe? Ultimately, the burden of proof before the needle goes into the vein is on the one recommending or mandating the procedure. Show us the science!

Another important consideration when discussing vaccines is the money aspect. This is a billion dollar industry in our nation. There is a lot of government money also given to states, and passed down to school districts, for meeting vaccine percentages guaranteed by the government to the pharmaceutical companies. The main concern of the drug industry is profit. When questioning the motivation, follow the money.
